Event Description

Students in Dr. Leah Misemer's English 1102 "Comics and Civic Engagement" class will host an opening for an exhibition featuring their original research-based comics about urban development issues in Atlanta. Topics discussed include gentrification around the Beltline, problems senior citizens face during relocation, poverty in suburban areas, and the role sustainability plays in community development. In order to highlight the problem-solving aspects of creativity students have explored during the course, the exhibit will also feature entries from multimodal journals, sketchnotes, and visual annotations. The exhibition is open to the public and designed to raise awareness about problems and potential solutions for problems facing Atlanta. After the opening, student work will be on display next to the 3rd floor stairwell in the Clough building for those wishing to learn more about urban development issues.

This course and exhibition is generously supported by grants from Serve-Learn-Sustain and GT Library's Communication Through Art program.
