

Federal Bureau of Investigation Resource Planning Office

What is RPO? The FBI's corporate office and internal consulting core

Start your career at the FBI today

Who are we? Business professionals driving the FBI ahead of the threat

The RPO manages the FBI's $5+ billion personnel budget and strategic planning processes; crafts internal policy; designs business intelligence tools; automates and re-engineers business processes; and provides project-based consulting services to senior executives

Resource Planning Office

RPO is led by an assistant director and two section chiefs. The division consists of seven units organized into two sections. Each unit is led by a unit chief and has different responsibilities.

Business Improvement Section

Strategy & Performance Section

Business Process Management Unit

Internal Advisory Group

Performance Management Unit

Administrative Management & Analysis Unit

Internal Policy Office

Strategy & Program Management Unit

Resource Analysis Unit

What Does an RPO Analyst Do?

An internal business consultant who manages projects, analyzes data, and creates and delivers presentations to FBI senior executives.

In some units, a business analyst may have a more technical focus and be a critical resource who configures, analyzes, adapts, and develops new IT processes and systems.

- Formulate and communicate executive strategy
- Manage financial assets
- Own and develop business processes
- Manage threats and resource allocation
- Provide analytical insights into key concerns for the organization
- Manage enterprise-wide policy
- Conduct business intelligence reporting and analysis

How do I apply?

Full-time – Email your resume to RPO_Recruiting@fbi.gov

Honors Internship – Apply on FBIJobs.gov and select Washington, DC and Resource Planning office as your preferred location and division.

Questions? Email RPO_Recruiting@fbi.gov

